How Search Engines Rank Web Pages, answer 1

Make a web sites which is:

1. Unique
2. High quality
3. Lots of different pages with different titles
4. Available in multiple languages

How Search Engines Rank Web Pages, answer 2

5. Many external incoming links from pages which themselves have a high ranking.
6. As exact match as possible for the query phrase:
  - a. In the title (repetition in the title?).
  - b. Also in text in links pointing to this page (also internal links are of value).
  - c. Also elsewhere in readable text in the body, repeated 2-3 times, if the phrase is repeated more than 2-3 times, there is a risk that the search engine will regard it as spamming.
  - d. Some engines also look at meta-description and meta-keywords.
7. Manual classification for the most common search phrases.

Get Many Links to your Web Site

SEO is no magic, it is hard, tedious work. For Web4Health, important was that I submitted the site to Yahoo, The Open Directory and other high-rank pages. I also searched the web for high quality pages in the same area as ours, and wrote letters to them, asking for a link to our site, and promising a reciprocal link from our site to their site.

A somewhat less ethical way is to put links from other sites which you control. Thus, I put links from the web areas <http://www.palme.nu/> and <http://dsv.su.se/jpalme/>.

Other partners in the Web4Health project also put links from their personal sites to our site.

Note: Links from sites with domain names or IP numbers similar or equal to the optimized site have less value. Thus, since <http://cmc.dsv.su.se/> is on the same IP number as <http://web4health.info/>, links from the <http://cmc.dsv.su.se/> are not as useful.

Optimize for Good “Niche” Search Phrases

It is usually impossible to optimize for single words, because there is too much competition. Instead, you optimize for good 2-3 word search phrases. A good search phrase should:

1. Occur often in search phrases to search engines.
2. Not occur prominently in too many high quality competitive pages.

Optimizing includes:

1. Finding popular search phrases. There is no value in optimizing a page for the phrase “How children react to trauma”, because no one ever types that phrase into a search engine.
2. Checking the competition in other pages, especially high quality pages, for the same search phrase.
3. Find niches, phrases which users type, and which have not too hard competition.

Example of phrase optimization

Why most site-internal search engines give bad results:

1. They only search on the words of the producers, not the words of the users.

Example: One of the two site-specific search engines provided by försäkringskassan, Sweden.

Search for "förtidspension" will work poorly, because the "correct" word is "sjukbidrag" and "aktivitetsersättning".

Search for "daghem" works poorly because the "correct" word is "barnstuga".

2. No good prioritizing among the matching pages.

Every good site-internal search engine requires manual classification by linguistic, not topic, experts.

Quality of Search Result

Figures taken from a master's thesis at DSV and based on a random sample actual Swedish-language questions asked by visitors to Swedish medical web sites.

Note: These figures includes as negative result cases (about 10 % of all questions in the sample), where the web site did not have any answer to the question asked.

Search method	Percentage of search success
QuickAsk	90 %
Google restricted to a certain domain ("site:" command)	68 %

Improving Automatic Indexes

Tool	Used by	Evaluation
Deduce priority from link structure	Google, SiteSeeker	Not very good unless very popular site
Manual priority	SiteSeeker, QuickAsk, SiteAssistant Web	Important, but requires work
Synonym lexicon	SiteSeeker, SiteAssistant Web	Some improvement, but many important words not found
Manual keywords/synonyms	SiteSeeker, QuickAsk, SiteAssistant Web	Important, but much work
Manual templates	QuickAsk, SiteAssistant Web	Valuable, but much work
Logging of users	All	Absolutely essential!
